

Facts about the Islamic Calendar

The Islamic year has twelve months that are based on a lunar cycle. Islamic months begin at sunset of the first day, the day when the lunar crescent is visually sighted. Since sighting of the crescent new moon can vary based on atmospheric conditions, actual dates can vary by 1 or 2 days from when predicted.

The lunar year is approximately 354 days long, so the months rotate backward through the seasons and are not fixed to the Gregorian calendar.

Months of the Islamic year

Each month in the Islamic year has a meaning to it. Following are the translations. To access the corresponding Gregorian dates for the 2010-2011 calendar year, access this website:
